Native page one contains standard digital text extracted directly from the document stream without optical processing.

Scanned page two requires optical character recognition due to the absence of an underlying digital text stream.

Native page three provides another digital text section confirming that mixed-mode documents preserve original text streams.

Scanned page four concludes the mixed-mode document demonstration with a second scanned page processed via optical recognition.