Page one introduces the fundamental principles of multimodal document ingestion. Text layers are analyzed to identify scanned content requiring optical character recognition.

Page two examines layout reconstruction and bounding box coordinates. Words are grouped into lines and blocks based on spatial coordinates returned by the optical engine.

Page three concludes with provenance preservation and citation integrity. Metadata tracks the exact source document, page number, and extraction method throughout the indexing workflow.